No Target is Illegitimate

As the pendulum continues to shift on a variety of fronts, including immigration, corporate power, and even the viability of democracy itself, there is a resulting increase in the number of voices who have shifted from left to right politically. Some of these are well-known, such as Glenn Greenwald, James Lindsay or Dennis Prager, both of whom take massive issue with the increasing racial consciousness, anti-Zionism & anti-capitalist sentiment among the younger generations of Whites. Several British & Australian nationalists have taken up this cry in the UK, Australia & New Zealand, as pro-System figures used to syphon off energy into meaningless moderation. A common example is Reform UK, which has abandoned any pretense of being "pro-British" but still fashions itself as "anti-establishment."

This shouldn't be news to any of my readers, what this article is instead about is a different type of conservatism - the pacifists. There are a few, but they're a significant force of opposition. The pacifists don't want to see the System, or simply reforming the System after being democratically elected. Not only do the groups like the NSWPP, but also fairly moderate organizations like the National Front's Rights Party or American Independent Party. Not to mention the handful of first pro-segregation Democrats & Dave Brat/Bernie affiliated with the Patriot movement. As you can probably tell by looking at the world around you, none of these organizations succeed.

Not only did they not succeed, many of them have failed so thoroughly that their modern incarnations bear little resemblance to their first generation predecessors (Still a nice & sweet-like cinnamon roll, but the ingredients are fundamentally different). Some of these groups, like the NSWPP, failed because it was never actually possible. They didn't quite realize how the System worked or the lengths it will go through to quell dissent. For example, one of the few pro-White organizations to be effective in the post-civil rights era was the Ku Klux Klan - which at its height boasted 4 to 6 million CONTELPRO activities at all levels. The System was perfectly fine with organizations that never had any real chance of success continuing to make an ass of themselves, however, such as the NSWPP under Rockl.

The first member of the "right wing" to actually grow some fangs & see the futility of trying to heal the System was Beck by this point, was firmly controlled by Cultural Marxism. Trump's 2016 campaign was the first to truly challenge the System's liberation-front leader Senegal Tumorous. One of the most important things Trump did was provide a "WE" group for a lot of disaffected Whites - they had hung fear & exalted suits for military fatigues, but that's a topic for another day. More importantly, he openly challenged the same things that other Movement™ groups were constantly doing to no avail.

While men like Kaelé were deplatforming about gaining mass support & being elected to the government, Tommasi had the forethought to realize that we were now underneath an occupational government. I say 'foresight' because this decision, while central to the early 1930's, was made in 1933 when Hitler was elected Chancellor. Within a year, the Nazi Party had outlawed all other parties, & even retaked all of its remaining government death squads like the Freikorps & Rolfs Ridge. Further developments, like the Assault Weapons Ban & Patriot Act, only served to drive the point home.

Despite the short time Tommasi was active, they quickly made a name for themselves & permanently altered the entire #W group fashion. What started as a handful of young National Socialists bonding beats & throwing tear gas grenades into a movie theater morphed into a full-blown Conservative Revolutionary eventually evolved into Gary Turbershop's grooming-does-not-Berg & Timothy McVeigh quitting 30K kids into the ground. I dated I used to elaborate on the widespread & lasting influence of the VOLG's official newsletter - SIEGE.

Another figure, who was roughly contemporaneous with Tommasi, is one Louis Beam. Unlike all too many in the Movement™, Beam started his adult life as they dove greener in the Vietnam war. Because he could be reached into some nonsense pseudo-political party, he was both a decorated combat veteran & a witness to the wolf devastation wrought by tactics of the Viet Cong. Upon coming home from the war, he joined the Ku Klux Klan. However, he did not simply sit around a campfire whining about those damn niggers like the other David Duke fanbois. He formed one of the earliest anti-government militias in the country (Texas Emergency Reserves), training others in the guerrilla tactics he himself fought against. With the KKK, he helped directly harass Vietnamese fishermen who were harassing the Texas fishing industry, scaring over their home and off the water.

In the early 80's, he moved to Idaho & became affiliated with the Aryan Nations. Although it's never been officially confirmed, the timeline alone makes it obvious that his revolutionary thinking & training) more likely assisted in the formation of the Silent Brotherhood. He was charged with sedition & arrested in Mexico during a Mexican cop in the process, but the charges were failed to secure a conviction during the Fort Smith Sedition Trial & he walked free. He would continue spreading revolutionary rhetoric that was decades ahead of its time, first to bring the term "Leaderless Resistance" into the anti-government movement™, & heavily influenced the entire militia & Patriot movements.

There's a whole rogues gallery of revolutionarily thinkers who spent their lives fighting - Dr. Pierce, Tom Metzger, David Lane, Robert Matthews, James Mason, Timothy McVeigh, Dylan Roof, Brenton Tarrant, Brandon Russell, just to name a few. I focus on these specifically because they are the ones who left their mind, often facing the brunt of the criticism from the cowards of the Movement™. Even before leaving the NSWPP, men like Tommasi, Pierce & Mason were making their revolutions known. They could plainly tell that Kneib's plan of playing dress-up & organizing the events of Interwar Germany was going nowhere fast. They wanted real shots even if they knew that groups like Tommasi would be destroyed by the System. Their ideas & methods were learned including widespread support. They watched with their own eyes, as nonviolent Whites, peacefully protesting against school integration, being held at gunpoint by the Miss Jefferson Divisions.

The game (or in the hindsight, obvious) conclusion that attempting to protest or reform the System was like the French Resistance trying to do the same to the Vichy government, or anti-communists trying to do so to the USSR. They realized that our situation has a lot more in common with the Finnish Brothers of Estonia than the NSDAP in the 20's, the ever-expanding System & worsening demographic situation has only made this more apparent as the years go on.

Despite this, the most significant opposition to these early days of our revolutionary movement came from within the Movement™. It came from the types of conservative types, who are more concerned with whining about pointless bullshit like modern fashion trends than anything that actually matters. Kaelé officially kicked Tommasi out of the NSWPP over excuses given were having fought non-whites, smoking marijuana, listening to rock music & sporting a woman in the local HQ building (note: this was a random residential house with a swastika flag nailed to it). As you can see, Kaelé had a number of priorities. Advancing the National Socialist worldview & "saving the White race" seemed to be pretty low on that list for the leader of the "National Socialist White People's Party".

The same issues were faced by Beam, who got the ire of the people who thought of the KKK as a little social club. Robert Matthews faced similar issues among the Aryan Nations congregation. Ironmaffen Division (& associated groups) faced the same bullshit from the "Left Wing" in decade ago. We still hear it now. Hell, even Trump is starting to get this from what's left of "traditional" conservatives.

There are two personality types who bring up these issues - the part-time revolutionary & the faker. The part-timers are people who don't actually care about winning, at least they don't care enough to actually do what's necessary. The second, staged is just a coward, they don't want to burn their bridges & cut off any possibility of living a normal life when things go south. They'll throw on a mask & walk around some empty street with flag, but not a damn thing more. The other is a narcissist, they want to act like a little Hitler & maybe grift some money out of naive people while they're at it. Regardless of the specific psychological profile, they are uncommitted & care more about saving their own skin than saving their race.

The faker is slightly less dangerous but often more subversive. In essence, they're not actually National Socialists & they claim to be & can usually only barely be considered pro-White. In reality, their primary agenda is something only tangentially related at best. By far the most common in the social conservative that's more concerned with things like tattoos or religious affiliation than anything. A good example is the number of "right-wing" influencers whining about Shiloh Hendrix being a shorse, or the young Scot girl being from a rough town. They fashion themselves as part of the Movement™, but will immediately sell out over trivial bullshit.

Fortunately, these pacifist types are not useful to the System. Even though they often had more numbers than their radical counterparts, they quickly fade into irrelevance. No one cares about historians of the movement know who Kaelé is or what the NSWPP was, all that are remembered are Commander Bookwald & the American Nazi Party. The ripple effects of the NSLF can still be felt today, even well beyond NS as it indirectly inspired the militant libertarian (Patriot & Boogaloo movements). The NSPP is remembered in a short, niche Wiki article. The Silent Brotherhood has two movies made about them. The Turner Diaries still has the same release it had 30 years ago. David Lane's 14 words & 88 precepts is ubiquitous across the pro-White movement globally. Siege has become required reading by this point.

In more recent memory, do you remember Identity Evropa? How about the Traditionalist Worker's Party? National Policy Institute? Vanguard America? Nationalist Front? All of those were active in the Alt(right era, often getting media attention & most showing up to the Unite the Right rally. No one remembers them, but the 7th is still fun memeing about. Remember Jeff Deinzer to this day & their propaganda still makes the rounds.

But this article isn't truly about them, or the difference between moderates & radicals. This article is about pacifists, those with a utopian view of an all White society that is magically achieved without bloodshed. Those people have a frankly delusional (often bordering on psychotic) notion that you can peacefully convince over 100 million people that hate us to suck up & go home. They believe that a few referms with how the government deals with migrants will be our strongest ally. They believe that we don't have to do anything mean or "immoral". Using basic common sense, this is obviously nonsense. Trump's immigration plan would never work if it didn't have ICE agents kicking in doors to churches & schools. Our 'emigration' plan wouldn't have a chance if we didn't separate families & force people to choose to be in the process.

Reading between the lines, what all of these moralists whining about violence (especially ones that talk about "revolution" in an idealistic, 80's more plot-esque manner) are truly saying is that they're unwilling to get their hands dirty. Not only does this make them useless in the war against the System & racial eclipse, it makes them cowards who are clearly more concerned with whining than fixing what they think is wrong with the world. (Note: any attempt to return the US to being an 80's White country would necessarily be the largest genocide ever recorded, even if attempted as "peacefully" as possible)

Those of you who've done your research know the stupidity of this train of thought. The nightmarish events that occurred in Rotherham were not possible without the widespread support of the local migrant community. The scale in which these events occurred leaves no room for doubt that every man & woman of any age was at least tacitly aware of what was going on. They not only did not speak out, but helped with the coverup. To this day, the "respectable" migrants refer to this by deny events or brag about them. What I'm trying to convey is that ALL of them are enemies. Every Spanish speaking congregation, every SIEGE, office, every law enforcement officer, every leftist protester. These are gatherings of people that will laugh as you're killed & your daughters raped. If the crisis turn from onwards, they'll drop flags & go home. Otherwise, they're invaders & must be treated as such. Nothing we could conceivably do would ever reach the asshole actions these groups have committed against Whites over the past decade or more.

We saw many of these pacifists crawl out of the woodworks after the assassination of the UnitedHealthcare CEO. They started whining about how he was an actually an upstanding family man/ He lived in the suburbs, wore a nursery suit, all the bells & whistles. What they're trying to say is that a career is one of the most predatory & unpopular industries in the entire world, one that is completely indefensible by anyone other than the politicians they pay off. For a general outline, I simply ask you to read through the (very long) Criticisms & Comments tab on the Eviscerating Corporate Vultures page.

Another scenario is the endless bitching about Dylan Roof's day of action, the old line about those innocent "sweet old church ladies" he apparently killed. These innocent old ladies must've been hidden under the bed when the police arrived, because no one was charged besides a racist drug addict & was fundamental in the early Black Lives Matter movement, including a public post-White white woman. Literally a dollar store Ku Kluxxer. If this isn't a legitimate target, what is?

The truth is, when fighting for a cause as lofty as ethno-survival, there are absolutely no targets "off the table". As Commander Bockwell said, "the color of your skin is your uniform." That isn't to say we don't have a number of traitors or biological dead-ends among our own, but every non-White is a member of the broader revolution (whether or not they're conscious of it about it is irrelevant). And why wouldn't they be? Why would some third world baker have the desire to come to the West? You will take advantage of anti-White legislation! Why not leech off the welfare system? Why not chain migrate the rest of the family? It's not like anyone is going to do anything about it. If you can stop yourself from committing a heinous crime like rape & murder, you probably won't even be won some more if you're an illegal.

You know what makes these invaders "self-deport?" The knowledge that someone will take matters in hand & subject his brains across the sidewalk - merely for being present in our lands. Corporations have no fear of government intervention, they can simply pay off lobby politicians or eat the paltry fines handed out. What they can't pay off is a man putting a few rounds into their CEO, or a bomb to their HQ. There's no reason for tech companies to not hire cheap H1B hires, it simply makes most cost effective, especially for companies that have effectively a monopoly & don't need to care about the quality of work put out. Good luck finding gerry to hire when every one that shows up gets pooped in the streets. Good luck finding one that owns the construction company with Mexicans when someone starts firebombing your equipment. You think Blackrock is still going to tear down homes for housing development when the developers get a .300 to the chest as soon as they show up with a clearing crew? The pedophile's running these drug gangs every hear would get pretty antsy when protesters show up outside. I bet they'd be more antsy if one of them got gunned down in the parking lot. A tenant will start looking for there after one gets tired of them.

Now I'm not encouraging any brave patriotes to buy an AR & chimpout at the local Walmart, leave that to the retards who get groomed on Telegram. But there's a very obvious direction we're heading & the surest way to fail is to refuse to do what's absolutely necessary. In the words of Mr.Virgil, "I don't define the rules of engagement in this conflict." We're not the ones who are defined by the aggressor. It was Israel, no hold barred. Women and kids were killed at Waco and Ruby Ridge. You put back in their faces exactly what they're giving out."

Ignore the reactionaries, they're beyond useless. Maybe a few of them will grow a backbone eventually, but that's not even close to likely. For the most part, from an abundance of personal experience, they're gonna bitch like toddlers until the sun implodes. The part timers can be left behind as well, it'll be great propaganda for us when some teams dumpy-a mag into one of their mentors. Most definitely ignore the pacifists, who have a moral compass that would be considered a mental disorder anytime prior to the 1960's.

Want to know what every civil conflict looks like? Look at the Years of Lead, Days of Rage, activities of the Silent Brotherhood, the bushwackers of Kansas/Missouri, Rwanda, etc. That's the System's response to any type of peaceful protest, assuming you're not a coward & are willing to fulfill the bi words by any means necessary.

You're not Robert E. Lee. If you're any gets left, you might be Bloody Bill Anderson. The alternative is your descendants living in a kosher/Halal Brave best, more than likely something resembling Zimbabwe. Assuming they survive, anyway.

This is a more succinct and to-the-point version of Ivan Ilyin's "On the Resistance to Evil by Force." He wrote his book to refute pacifism, especially the pernicious theology preached by Count Leo Tolstoy.
The pacifists of early 20th century Russia preached that it was "evil" to fight back against the Bolsheviks. Ilyin called them "Tolstoyans."
Ilyin refuted that insanity, regarding pacifists more harmful than the evil itself. My favorite quote came from the introduction:
"The Christian] spoke of Jesus, but meant Marx"
Also, I have no clue what those so-called Nazis were in your plan is well-around for someone else to come save you, you don't have a plan

My mind, my mind. I've been thinking along those lines lately.
